Israeli Raid in Iraq Puts Reagan at Odds With Friend

U.S. Strategy in Middle East Suddenly Presented With New Obstacles

By Hedrick Smith New York Times Service WASHINGTON - The Israeli air attack

on Iraq's nuclear installation has presented the Reagan administration with its first sharp confrontation against a friendly country. It has also raised new obstacles for the administration's overall strategy in the Middle Fast

With uncertainty about Arab reaction and possible retaliation, administration offi-cials and congressional leaders were initially cautious about making assessments beyond the State Department's strong condemnation of the raid.

But officials were fearful that the Israeli strike had not only complicated the peacemaking effort in Lebanon by Philip C. Habib, the U.S. special envoy, but that it might also handicap broader U.S. efforts to promote an Arab-Israeli peace. Furthermore, it might hinder administration plans to move Israel and the moderate Arabs into a strategic consensus to resist Soviet penetration of the region, the officials said.

Pall of Solidarity

Normally, when tensions rise between Israel and one of the Arab states, such moderate Arab countries as Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Jordan feel the pull of Arab solidarity and become more reluctant than usual to be drawn into the process of peace with Israel, Iraq's call for an Arab meeting seemed ers, accusing them of posturing with miliaimed at exploiting such tensions after the tant statements but not engaging in battle Israeli raid.

Although Sen. Baker raised the danger of an Arab counterstrike against Israeli reac-tors, high administration officials said that

NEWS ANALYSIS

Washington had not yet detected any alarming Arab military movements or alerts, Iraq's own delayed and subdued reaction to the raid was read here as a sign of Baghdad's own reluctance to battle Israel directly while engaged in war with Iran.

Camp David Accords

Rep. Clement J. Zablocki of Wisconsin, the Democratic chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, condemned the Isracli raid as "a highly irresponsible action." He said the raid could destroy the Camp David process by which Israel and Egypt have made peace and have been negotiating on a West Bank settlement. Administration. officials, however, were less pessimistic. They noted that President Anwar Sadat of Egypt has been steadily implementing the accords worked out at Camp David. Moreover, Mr. Sadat has often scored Iraqi leadmented Sen. Howard H. Baker Jr., Republi- that Israel's peace with Egypt, reinforced by Prime Minister Menachem Begin's latest meeting with that Mr. Sadat on the Sinai, enabled the fsraelis to feel free to attack Iraq without fearing a counterattack across the Sinai from Egypt.

For the Reagan administration, the two immediate problems are to keep momentum behind Mr. Habib's efforts to break the Syrian-fsraeli deadlock in Lebanon and to deal with the question of whether Israel has violated U.S. law by using U.S.-supplied F-4 and F-15 jets in the attack on Iraq. In December, 1974, Washington cut off military aid to Turkey because Congress determined that the Turkisb use of U.S. arms in its invasion of Cyprus violated the Arms Export Control Act. That act permits supply of U.S. weapons "to friendly countries solely for internal security, for legitimate self-defense" and for use in selective security arrangements in conformity with the UN Charter. Sen. Zablocki was quoted as calling the Israeli bombing of Iraq "an offensive act, not a defense act." He later said his committee would make "a full and careful review" of the Israeli action and if it found that the law was violated, "then the law should be enforced."

Interpretation of Law

But Sep. Alan Cranston a California Democrat contended that in his view "a pre-emplive strike is defensive" in view of his information that Iraq "could have provided a [nuclear] weapon by Oct. 1 and, if not then, certainly by the end of the year."

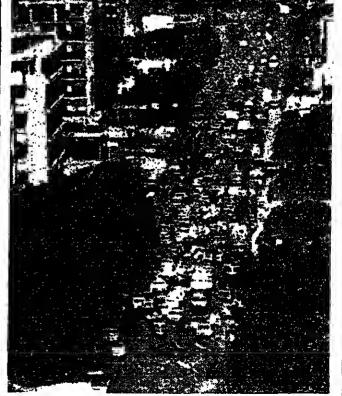

In the past Congress has been reluctant to enforce restrictions on Israel's use of U.S. arms. In 1978, Cyrus R. Vance, as secretary of state, notified Congress that Israeli raids on southern Lebanon may have violated the export control act. Congress declined to interpret the law this way.

But the Israeli actions seem likely to sharpen congressional debate over the Reagan administration's plans to draw such friendly countries as Israel, Egypt, and Sandi Arabia into loose and indirect coopera-tion with Washington to resist Soviet penetration, partly through the inducement of U.S. arms. Israel and its supporters have already strongly opposed the administration's intention to sell Saudi Arabia five highly sophisticated planes.

Even if Congress eventually goes along with future arms sales to Israel and Saudi Arabia, the administration feels the embarrassment of sharp frictions with Israel in spite of President Reagan's repeated assurances of support during the presidential campaign and the administration's recent efforts to ease frictions in Lebanon.

Although the administration does not want to debate Israel publicly, officials privately dispute the Israeli contention that Iraq was on the verge of producing a nuclear weapon this year. We think it would have been several years — three years anyway." a well-placed official said.

Mr. Reagan was reported to have been upset that the Israeli action was timed at a moment of delicate diplomacy aimed at promoting a settlement in Lebanon.

Called Important Step

If the Russians buy the full 6 million tons, it will bring their imports of U.S. wheat and corn to 14 million tons this year.

Mr. Lodwick, who oversees commodity programs, said the United States has made an important step toward normalizing its grain trade with the Soviet Union by offering Moscow access to ship-ments held up by the embargo as well as to future purchases.

The partial embargo imposed by President Jimmy Carter in reactioo to the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan limited Soviet purchases this year to the minimum 8 million tons. President Reagan lifted the embargo April 24. American farmers, eager to expand grain sales to the Soviet Union, had complained that they were being singled out to bear the burden of U.S. foreign pobcy. The U.S. crop this year is expected to be good and American farmers are anxious for markets.

Commodity analysts believe that the Soviet team had a strong negotiating position because they have so far circumvented the sanctions and the Soviet crop this year will be good after two dramatic failures. The sanctions, backed by Canada, Australia and the Common Market, left Moscow needing 35 million tons of grain which was acquired from Argentina and else-where on the world market.

China Warns U.S. on Arms Sales to Taiwan The Associated Press

PEKING - The Chinese government, in its first official response to reports that the United States is considering selling it arms, said Thesday that it would rather oot buy U.S. weapons than agree to continuing U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. It added that if the sales continued China would make "a strong response."

Friday, a State Department official briefing newsmen on Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.'s trip to China next week said that the administration is ready to discuss weapons sales to China.

The State Department later affirmed that the administration anter pates continuing sales of about $700 million a year of arms to Taiwan.

Reagan Agrees to Conference of the Americas

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON -- President Reagan accepted the invitation on Tuesday of President Jose Lopez Portillo of Mexico to a North-South summit conference of the Americas after insisting that President Fidel Castro of Cuba be excluded from the meeting. Official confirmation of Mr. Reagan's decision to participate in the meeting of hemisphere leaders at Cancun, Mexico, next October came in an exchange of warm, personal toasts by the two American presidents who spent two days together discussing hemispheric issues and basking in the hospitality they both enjoy,

At the conclusion of the visit, Mr. Reagan announced that the two nations would establish a bilateral commission to seek solutions to problems that were not solved during the meeting.

Guards Fire to Disperse Bani-Sadr Supporters

TEHRAN - Revolutionary Guards fired warning shots Toesday to disperse thousands of leftist supporters of President Abolhassan Bani-. Sadr who were gathering for a protest march in central Tehran that was banned by the Interior Ministry.

The demonstration was called by the Mujahideen e-Khalu, a semi-clandestine group combining Marxism and Islam, to protest the dosine two days ago of the president's newspaper, Islamic Revolution .:

Witnesses said thousands of persons trying to gather outside Tehran University were dispersed by the Revolutionary Guards, who fired antomatic weapons into the air. The guards were supported by Hezbollahis (members of the Party of God), who fought with the president's backers. An undisclosed oumber of persons were taken to the hospital with knife wounds, hospital sources said.

Nuclear Hazard From Bombed Plant Seen as Limited

By Walter Sullivan New York Times Service

NEW YORK --- If, as appears possible, 25 pounds of highly cariched uranium was in storage at the Osirak reactor site near Baghdad, some of that radioactive material may have been scattered locally when the facility was bombed Sunday by Israeli planes. The hazard, however, would be far less than that from the bombing of a working reactor.

One reason that the hazard is at worst probably limited, according to specialists, is that the radioactivity of uranium is low. Another is that the material does not readily produce droplets that can be dispersed and inhaled

Once uranium atoms begin to be split in the operation of a nuclear plant, however, a wide range of hazardous fission products are produced, as well as plutonium, which can

One factor that may have made for greater risk was France's reported radiation treatment of uranium fuel for the plant. Mr. Winston said that 93-percent enrichment was not an unusual level for research reactors, since it enables them to produce a rich harvest of the isotopes used for industrial, medical and research purposes. Iraq describes the Osirak facility as such a research

According to Dr. Roger McClellan, a spe cialist in the toxicity of nuclear plant materials, tests have indicated that, in an accident, uranium would not readily break up into tiny particles that could be carried far from the site and be inhaled.

A far greater concern would be the dispersal of plutonium in an accident involving a working reactor, since plutonium is extremely poisonous.

He had instead pleaded guilty to mansiaughter on the ground of diminished responsibility. He was jailed for life for 13 murders and seven attempted murders.

JUVISY, France - American politicians call it "clout." In France, the word "piston" conveys the same meaning. And Claude Germon, the Socialist candidate for the legislative seat in this working class suburban area south of Paris, says he has got it.

"The new minister of sports is a personal acquaintance of mine," he confided to an athletic voter who approached him at the entrance of the commuter train station with a request that Mr. Germon help him get official recognition for his sports club.

When an employee of a failing machine-tool factory asked Mr. Germon what could be done about growing company bankruptcies and unemployment; the Socialist candidate assured him that his good friend, Pierre Joxe, the new minister of industry, was looking into the critical situation at that very moment popular support for the Socialists The Communist leadership has bas soared. And if the trend prevails. Mr. Mitterrand may easily gain a parliamentary majority in the June 14 and 21 legislative elec-tions that will enable him to carry out the bulk of his leftist economic and political programs.

The election last month of a Socialist president, Francois Mitterrand, has given his party a huge that it is makin boost. Opinion polls show that them in droves.

The Levers of Power

For political theorists, the shift toward the Socialists can be partly men remarked with astonishment explained by the widespread conviction in France that the Fifth Republic created by De Gaulle in 1958 could not survive if the legislature were at odds with the president. But any Chicago ward heeler could understand the feeling among many French voters that it makes sense to back candidates of power. It is an argument that is troubling many of the conservative leg-islators who have enjoyed until now a solid majority in the 491scat National Assembly. The oewfound Socialist clout is also scaring the Communists, who fear that it is making their voters desert

When Georges Marchais, the Communist secretarygeneral, met recently with Socialist leaders to discuss the legislative campaign, he was so amenable that some Socialist Party spokesthat be sounded more loyal to the president than they did. Communist legislative candidates have virtually erased their party labels from their campaign literature. In Mr. Germon's district, Pierre Juquin, the Commu-nist legislator who is running for re-election, even claims to have just as many friends in the Socialgovernment as his opponent.

At the Socialists Side During the last three years, Mr. Juquin, a member of the Communist Politburo, savaged the Socialists with allegations that they were no hetter than the conservatives in power. But Mr. Juquin's campaign literature now is replete with pho-tographs showing him at the side of Socialist notables.

Ulster Problem Raises Theological Issue: When Is Fatal Hunger Strike a Suicide?

By Kenneth A. Briggs New York Times Service

NEW YORK - The recent death of four hunger strikers in Northern Ireland raises questions about the position of the Roman Catholic Church on whether such a form of protest constitutes suicide.

According to church teaching, a person who takes his own life has acted immorally because a life is destroyed that was created by God. At the same time, there are many factors that may cause uncertainty about the nature and morality of a given case.

Within that framework of the sacredness of life, a theme echoed in the church's efforts to eod the practice of abortion, the situation of the hunger strikers has emerged as another aspect of the same basic moral responsibility.

Io modern times, however, theologians have given increasing attention to the psychological coodition of a persoo who is ending his life. It has become widely accepted that such a person could not have been able to make a responsible tensively by the moral theologians.

Thus the four Irish hunger strikers were buried with church rites. But the death of the four, who refused food despite pleas from church officials, have left many Roman Catholics wondering about the moral justification. Providing the tools for modern business of Contract Advanced computer and communications techniques are the tools of modern business. And whether you are at work in the office, or resolving a problem on the factory floor, attending an out-of-town conference, or even en-route to an appointment, the overall level of efficiency is very much related to the availability and application of such tools within the immediate environment. Philips advanced computer and communication tools are helping to improve efficiency in many different business environments.

Take the office, for example. Our wordprocessors have reduced significantly the time-consuming task of typing, editing and the filing of texts and correspondence while enabling managers to vastly increase the amount of information they can disseminate. Philips computer-based business systems are used for applications ranging from bookkeeping and accountancy to statistical, marketing and management reporting. And for businesses large and small our distributed data processing networks bring computing power to the data source via office-based terminals, or work-stations.

Business communications, also, have been considerably improved by means of our computerised private telephone, telex and viewdata systems; intelligent office terminals, dictation equipment, intercom and paging systems. Furthermore, their flexibility and compatibility enable them to be integrated to provide a business communications network for the simultaneous transmission of voice, image, text and telex information.

And when your business takes you away from the office, the chances are that Philips is at work there too, as the following examples illustrate.

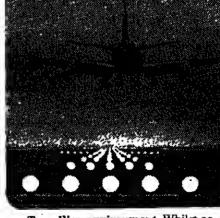

Industrial environment. The speed, convenience and reliability of advanced computer and communicatioos techniques are of special importance to industry, and Philips is among the world's leading suppliers. Our computer-aided process control equipment is installed in many types of light, medium and heavy industry as well as instrumentation for selective and on-line quality control of materials and components.

We have designed closed circuit television systems for applications ranging from the supervision of critical stages in industrial processes to plant security surveillance. Often these systems are integrated with radio/telephone and remote control desks to enable appropriate measures to be instantly effected.

We also supply industrial and office lighting systems that enhance the working environment whilst reducing eyestrain and physical discomfort.

، ۲.

Travelling environment. Whilst eoroute to a business appointment, a Philips Traffic Management system may be controlling road traffic. Your flight reser vation will probably have been processed by a telecommunications oetwork controlled by our computers. And each stage of your flight, from take-off to landing may have been assisted by a Philips Air Traffic Rader system, Navigational Aid or Radio Communications system.

Congress environment. The checking in procedure at many leading hotels is now much simpler thanks to Philips Integrated Hotel system; which also processes reservations, room-services, accounts and security as well as geoeral administration and hotel management reports. Within the conference hall, our conference systems enable each delegate to participate in or listen to the proceedings with absolute clarity - even if it is a multilingual gathering. Ballots may be cast via our Electronic Voting system and procedings followed outside of the conference hall by means of our closed circuit television and sound distribution installations. We have also supplied colour television and radio broadcast equipment to conress halls and cultural centres in many arts of the world.

The Israeli Raid A Question of Survival

nuclear reactor in Iraq that Israeli fighterbombers destroyed on Sunday. The first is whether it was intended to produce weaponsgrade fissionable material to be used in bombs against Israel. And the second is whether there was another way to prevent Iraq from achieving its goal. The second question is obviously moot if the answer to the first is no. And there is no definitive answer to the first question because it deals with intentions. But since it is the first duty of every state to survive, governments must calculate their enemies' intentions in the light of their capabilities.

If the state is as vulnerable as Israel because of its minuscule population and land area, there is little margin for error. A handful of Hiroshima-size atomic bombs would eliminate it from the map of the Middle East. And when the prospect of Iraq having nuclear weapons is viewed through the prism of the Holocaust and four wars with its Arab neighbors in 33 years, it is self-evident that Israelis would be predisposed toward regarding the Iraqi facility as a threat to their existence.

Iraq's anti-Israeli intentions are not provable, but neither are Israel's fears irrational. Government and private experts in the United States, for example, said that the Iraqi reactor almost certainly was intended to produce plutonium for weapons use. "You use a reactor like that either for metallurgical research or for making plutonium," an MIT specialist said. "Since there's no metallurgical industry in Iraq, it has to be for plutonium." Two researchers at the International Institute for Strategic Studies wrote in The Times of London that "the Iraqi nuclear enterprise has been steadily moving closer to a nuclear weapons option."

It seems, then, that there was enough evidence indicating that Iraq was close to developing a nuclear-weapons capability for rea-

There are two critical questions about the - sonable men to conclude that some response was necessary. Which brings us back to the second question. Was bombing the reactor the appropriate response? Since the reactor was due to go critical before the end of the summer, from the Israeli point of view something had to be done quickly. If it was de-stroyed after being loaded, the fallout would have contaminated Baghdad, perhaps killing many thousands of people.

Since France and to a lesser degree Italy had made the Iraqi nuclear program possible, since the Soviet Union had also supplied the Iraqis with an experimental facility, and since the French said that they would continue to supply fuel for the reactor, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin may have concluded that it was pointless to wait any longer. Besides, he may have also calculated that France's new Socialist government would not replace the facility, as former Pres-ident Valery Giscard d'Estaing surely would have. The fact that the timing coincided with the final stretch of Mr. Begin's election campaign provided a filip.

There is no question that for a time the Israeli action will raise the tension level in the Middle East. And Israel is vulnerable to criticism for not having signed the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty, of which Iraq is a signatory. It is also true that Israel has atomic weapons of its own, although they probably have not been tested. And with the spread of nuclear weapons technology to Pakistan, which might share it with Libya or the Palestine Liberation Organization, one must ask, where will it all end? But having said that, it is still easy to understand why for tiny Israel in the Atomic Age, the only strategy for survival that seems plausible is a pre-emptive strategy. And until the Palestinian problem is resolved in the context of strong guarantees for Israeli security, that is likely to remain the case. INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE.

A Grievous Error

In knocking out the Iraqi nuclear reactor, the Israelis have made a grievous error. They did not act lightly, but they acted, we believe, in a way contrary to their own long-term interests and in a way contrary to U.S. interests as well. They have validated - revalidated the strategy of pre-emption, of which they may again be a sorrowful victim. No less significantly, they have validated - revalidated - the notion in Arab minds, and not only in Arab minds, that Israel is a nation that looks to make its way in the Middle East not by accommodation with its neighbors but by a policy of force.

They have further conveyed the idea that Israel, which is widely believed to have a nuclear capability of its own, regards itself as an exceptional state, one not bound by the rules and restraints applicable to its neighbors. They have confounded U.S. strategy by issuing, in effect, an open invitation to the Soviet Union to re-enter the region in the role of protecting innocent Arabs against U.S.-sponsored Israeli assault. Finally and ironically, they have validated the idea that the kind of power that most counts in the Middle East is nuclear power - otherwise, why would Israel have risked so much in this attack? Yet this is also true: for more than two years, Israel had been attempting, publicly and privately, to enlist the West's concern in its strategic nightmare --- that an Arab country, in this case Iraq, would acquire a nuclear capability. The source of its fear was a French-supplied research reactor, which runs on highly enriched uranium fuel directly usable in a nuclear weapon. The Israeli efforts to halt the French exports failed. The French felt their own interest in pursuing the export was of far greater importance than the consequences to others; and the Americans, despite intelligence estimates that Iraq was in fact pursuing a bomb, were not prepared to

Italian firms, can make a strong case to the Congress, the cuts are expected to be no less than 30 percent. it should be noted, had also agreed to supply Iraq with a small but militarily important Moreover, by executive action, the Reagan ad-ministration has wiped out most of the money for the social sciences given through the Na-reprocessing facility. By last week, the fuel shipment, enough to make several Hiroshima-sized bombs, was imminent. Once that fuel was inside the reactor, it could not be attacked without risking release of large amounts of radioactivity and a consequent international uproar. If the reactor were quickly destroyed, however, there would be no risk of radioactivity and thereafter no legitimate reason to ship the fucl

Thus a unique "window" opened. For a country convinced, as Israel plainly was, 1) that an Iraci nuclear bomb was an intolerable threat to its vital interests and 2) that no relief from the West was forthcoming, the moment of truth had arrived. In those terms, the raid carries its own explanation; in effect, the so-called international community washed its hands and left the dirty work of stopping an Iraqi weapons program to the Israelis.

Is American Culture Being Set Adrift?

By Richard Sennett

NEW YORK — As I watched President Reagan's inaugural festivities on televi-sion a few months ago. I kept thinking about President Kennedy's, 20 years before. The What explains the adminstration's willingness to inflict so much harm to the culture for so little benefit to the budget? Three reasons seem most pertinent. Kennedy guests were younger, if my memory serves me right. The Kennedy men looked ea-· First is the Reagan ideology. The Reagan people are convinced that the public sector has sapped the private sector, the government spending money and conducting programs that private enterprise would otherwise engage in, and do a better job of. Applied to the arts. this ideology bolds that private foundations, corporations and individuals can be stimulated to contribute more money to culture if the government gives less.

The Reagan administration points to the new, giant MacArthur Foundation as a potential replacement for direct cash grants to writ-ers and artists; the administration believes that its plans to revive the economy will put more money in the hands of corporations to distribute philanthropically. The administration does not worry whether, even if private largesse were stimulated by public stinginess, the money would be distrib-uted equitably - whether, for example, young artists would be rewarded proportionately by corporate grants to the money given to estab-lished artists. The national endowments, to their great credit, worried about the next generation; the Reagan administration is more animated by a spirit of sawe qui peut. • Second, there is a resurgence of anti-intel-lectualism in the United States, a renewed hostility to intellectuals which makes this financial indifference acceptable. As the historian Richard Hofstadter has shown in his "Anti-Intel-lectualism in American Life", Americans have had a long, deep-seated aversion to profession-al thinkers and artists.

The Puritans, themselves rebels in thought, came early in America to believe that free thinking was the enemy of communal solidarity, and their aversion has persisted. Tocque-ville was struck by this anti-intellectualism in the Jacksonian Era, Henry James and Henry Adams felt it in the first great industrial age.

In our own time, Sputnik seemed to mark a change. Knowledge was a weapon in our war with the Russians, and the Kennedys were able to make their own values public values because Americans believed that culture mattered diplomatically and internationally. The shocks that American culture felt at the end of the 1960s have made our society fall back into its old patterns.

• The third reason the current administration shows such a cavalier, if not downright bostile, attitude to the writers and artists of the group of intellectuals who have attached them-selves to this presidency.

The people who have the ear of the new administration are men like George Gilder, whose recent book was described by the budget director, David Stockman, as the bible of the administration, and Norman Podhoretz, the editor of Commentary Magazine.

These are men mostly motivated by ressenti-ment: they resent the low esteem in which they are generally held by other writers and editors; they have converted the cracks that have opened up in familial and communal values during the last decade into personal affronts; they tend to think of large cultural institutions as the personal vehicles of a left-wing establishment. They are men whose satisfactions come from being against: against the recent past, against artistic experiment, against the young. The paradox of these men is that they speak like outsiders, at a time when they have access to the highest levels of political influence. By economic ideology, historical tradition, and its own inner intellectual circle, the Reagan administration is preparing to set American culture adrift. The Metropolitan Opera will not close, but provincial opera companies seeking funds to put on new works by unknown composers will have a hard time.

A Hard Time

Yale University will not close, but its advanced graduates seeking grants to write a first book will have a hard time. Scholarly projects taking the oral histories of working people, conservancy-training programs, studies of women in the professions — worthy endeavors unlikely to excite the local banker at gift-giving time — all have been or will shortly be cut

The Reagan administration imagines it is mposing a period of healthy austerity on American culture; waste and cant will be routed. But the culture business is like no business Mr. Reagan understands: The worst is the most saleable; good or great work cannot be measured the way a businessman measures profits. Waste-watchers, cost-cutters and angry failed men in charge of a nation's culture can only succeed in doing it great damage.

Richard Sennett is co-director of the New York

Institute for The Humanities. He will speak on this subject at the Centre Georges Pompidou during a two-day colloquium on June 10-11. He wrote this article for the International Herald

Who Needs a Speech?

By Stephen S. Rosenfeld WASHINGTON - An odd notion of President Reagan, the Great Noncommunicator, has taken root - shallowly, one trusts - under the very roof of the White House. There one can hear the admission, accompanied by sighs and shakes of the head, that President Reagan has indeed and unfortunately failed to spell out his foreign policy goals, and that he needs to make a major address to accomplish that job. Hard on the beels of this confession comes the rather defensivesounding explanation that the president does, of course, have good reason for having left a gap momic plan out of the way first. Talk about confusion of form and substance. One can forgive the town's once and future speech writers for suggesting that the prowriters for suggesting that the pro-cess of preparing a Major Foreign Policy Speech, in which a presi-dent generates the basic themes for his aides to elaborate, refine and thrash out, is itself electric and stately, virtually the crowning ex-ercise of presidential leadership. But how can savvy aides close to Reagan be ululating in this fashion? Say what you will about the Reagan foreign policy, it seems to me insupportable to say that we don't know what his goals are. What do we know better? When has a president ever communicated more clearly — from where it counts: the heart, the hip — where be wants to go in the world? Just who is in doubt? We may have known more about Mr. Reagan's international ambitions before his presidency began that we knew about Jimmy Carter's when his presidency ended.

Rely on Signals

Actually, to know Mr. Reagan's policy we do not have to rely entirely on the signals he has been sending for the last 15 or so years - as constant, consistent and reli-able as these bave been. In his nearly five months in the White House, his administration has taken numerous specific steps around the world. We do not know all the particular steps he will take from here on in and how they will match up with each other. But Don Ober-dorfer of The Washington Post connected the dots the other day. and came up with "an accretion of tactical decisions [adding] up to a policy, if not a grand strategy." Quite so.

Some people complain, or a lege, that the administration is still groping for a grand design, or is still groping for lack of one, but that is the last complaint I would make. My complaint is that Mr. Reagan has a grand design, one he shaped and firmed up in his years in the wilderness, and that he is not so much testing it against reality as he is imposing it piece by piece as he goes, without taking due care to see if it fits. Events have forced him to take some detours - the grain embargo - but the design seems no less operative Advantage?

In the circumstances, what pos-sible advantage can there be for Mr. Reagan to let it all hang out in from the government budget.

But these are not, finally, the terms in which the Israeli raid has to be measured. Many parties share the blame for the fact that Israelis and Palestinians remain at odds, but the Israelis must shoulder their own share. Especially under Prime Minister Menachem Begin, they have conducted a policy convincing most Arabs that there is no place for the Palestinians. This is not the whole explanation of it nor is it a justification, surely; but it is the atmosphere in which the Iraqi nuclear program has gone forward. It will resume or another Arab nuclear program will begin unless there is a turn by Israel, with its Arab neighbors, toward a political approach. In raids on Iraqi reactors, as in raids on Israeli villages, there is nothing but more rum.

THE WASHINGTON POST.

Israel's Illusion

Israel's sneak attack on a French-built nuclear reactor near Baghdad was an act.of inexcusable and short-sighted aggression.

Even assuming that Iraq was hellbent to divert enriched uranium for the manufacture of nuclear weapons, it would have been working toward a capacity that Israel itself acquired long ago. Contrary to its official assertion, therefore, Israel was not in "mortal danger" of being outgunied. It faced a potential danger of losing its Middle East nuclear monopoly, of being deterred one day from the use of atomic weapons in war. And while that danger may now be delayed, it is also enhanced ---- by Iraq's humiliation.

Israel is not the first embattled nation to toy with the thought that security in the nuclear age can be achieved by nuclear monopoly. The agitation in the United States for a "pre-emptive strike" against the Soviet Union 30 years ago had its roots in the same pathetic logic. A decade ago, it was the Russians who threatened to knock out China's nuclear reactors. And India surely has been tempted to try to stop Pakistan from pursuing it into the nuclear club.

But Israel has become the first nation to act on that impulse and thus to tear yet another of the international system's fragile barriers against anarchy. What good is Israel's heroic and painful quest for secure and recognized boundaries if it, too, pays them no heed?

When Prime Minister Menachem Begin cries out that he is "not afraid of any reaction by the world," he embraces the code of his weakest enemies, the code of terror. He justifies aggression by his profound sense of victim-hood. And he assumes that even commitments to allies --- like those governing the use of U.S. weapons - can be twisted to suit any-purpose.

No one should deny that Israel, over the decades, has been more provoked than provoking. Pursuing oil and commerce, France and other European governments have staged an ugly competition to sell dangerous nuclear technologies in unstable regions. Ignoring U.S. concerns about the proliferation of nuclear weapons, they have taken refuge behind a woefully inadequate international control system.

And looking back further, it is not Israel that chose to wage a 30-year war for its right of survival.

But pre-emptive aggression is a reckless game. If Israel's security justifies the destruction of one Arab reactor, why not every other? And why not take out other threatening technologies? Why not, indeed, slaughter potentially dangerous people - like the chief of Irac's nuclear program, who was mysteriously murdered in Paris a year ago?

Israel's ever-widening definition of self-defense is illusory. It is bound to unify a challenged Arab world. It keeps croding the support of Israel's fastest friends. Such conduct argues that Israeli behavior is irrelevant to Middle East events. It argues for unrelenting attack in pursuit of an unsustainable superiority. It argues for a policy that will make it impossible to augment Israel's formidable defenses with diplomacy. Israel risks becoming its own worst enemy.

Working less, as Economics Minister Otto Lambsdorff remarked not long ago, has also made the West German appear 'more agreeable." But agreeability has its price.

How high was startingly apparent during last week's marathon debate in the parliament.

Some of the figures and statis-tics batted around during inter-minable bours of often turgid speeches were mind-boggling and suggested that what some still call the "social safety net" bas indeed become what others term a "social hammock."

Social Spending

General government expenditure now accounts for around 47 percent of the GNP. Total social spending last year was 450 billion Deutsche marks ($200 billion) and will approach 500 billion marks in 1981. Of the federal government's following strict party lines, almost half is allocated for the "net," and to finance it, the administration will have to borrow almost 34 biltion marks. two-thirds of the new borrowing will have to go to service and pay off old debt At that, there were still some in

The fashionable argument of the CDU/CSU opposition these days is to blame the economic malaise and the fiscal dilemma on the SPD/FDP's halcyon decades of social promise and societal reform. U.S. High Court Aids Women on Pay Rights

By Jim Mann Las Angeles Times Service

WASHINGTON - The Supreme Court has expanded the ability of American women to bring sex-discrimination lawsuits that contend that their wages are being kept unfairly low. By the slim margin of 5 to 4, the justices decided that the 1964 Civil Rights Act allows women to challenge their rates of pay in court without being forced to prove that some men are getting more money than they are for the same kinds of work

The importance of the ruling, made on Monday, is that it permits women to contend that they are being underpaid because of their sex even if they work in jobs that men have never performed jobs that have been traditionally set aside for women. The court rejected the argument that the 1964 law allows lawsuits over wages only when the principle of equal pay for equal work is violated.

The ruling by the all-male court was carefully qualified. Both the majority and the dissenters went to great lengths to characterize the ecision as a limited one. The justices stressed repeatedly that they were not approving the broad con-cept of "comparable worth" - the idea that women should be paid as much as men whenever they do jobs that are roughly of the same difficulty or of the same value to a community.

door open for such assertions of comparable worth to be made in subsequent cases. And the decision made it clear for the first time that whenever women have evidence that their bosses discriminated on the hasis of sex in setting salaries, they may file suit under the 1964 Civil Rights Act — no matter whether men are performing the same tasks or not. The court ruled in a case brought by a group of women who had worked as matrons at the Washington County jail in Hillsboro. Ore. Their jobs required them to guard female prisoners in one section of the jail and to perform some clerical duties. The jail's corrections officers, who were men, guarded male prisoners in a separate section of the jail.

In 1973, the matrons were paid salaries of between $525 and $668 a month, while the corrections officers were paid $701 to $940. The next year, the county closed the women's section of its jail and abolished the matrons' jobs. They sued the county, contending that it had engaged in sex discrimination by paying them less than the male corrections officers.

A federal district judge threw out the suit, saying that because the matrons did not do the same work as the corrections officers, they had no legal right to claim they were entitled to equal pay. But the U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco overturned his ruling and sent the case back to him for a new trial. The county then appealed the case to the Supreme Court. cent as much as the men.

Civil Rights Act

The principal issue in the case was how to interpret provisions of the 1963 Equal Pay Act and the 1964 Civil Rights Act as they ap-ply to men's and women's wages.

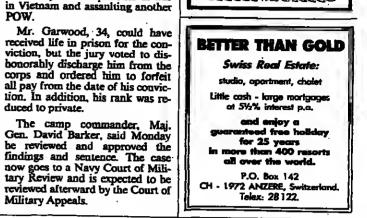

The 1963 law had prohibited employers from paying women less than men for performing the same jobs. The Civil Rights Act, a much broader but more abstract law, barred employers from discriminating against any individual "with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions or privileges of employment" because of the indi-vidual's sex.

Washington County officials maintained that a section of the 1964 law made it clear that Congress did not intend to go any fur-ther than the equal-pay-for-equal work standard of the law passed the previous year. The former jail matrons and civil rights groups contended that the 1964 law goes further and applies to any sex discrimination in wage rates.

In an opinion by William J. Brennan Jr., the court agreed with the jail matrons.

He-noted that the jail matrons claim to have evidence that county officials evaluated the worth of tary their jobs, decided the matrons Military Appeals.

Zia's Widow Seen as Possible Political Heir

By Keyes Beech Los Angeles Times Service

DACCA, Bangiadesb - Two women have emerged as possible successors to President Ziaur Rahman, who was assassinated on May 30. One of them is the soldier-president's widow, Begum Kaelida Rahman, who, according to friends, has no political ambitions and has never made a speech.

The other is Hasina Wazed, daughter of Sheikh Mujihur Rahman, the country's first president, who was also assassinated. She holds President Zia at least morally responsible for her father's death.

The government, which re-mained in place after Gen. Zia was killed by a handful of rebel army officers in the southern port city of Chittagoog, has pledged that a presidential election will be held within 180 days, or no later than Nov. 9.

Gen. Zia so completely domioated the country's political life for almost six years that oo ready replacement is in sight.

Political observers said the country's faction-ridden army will be the final arbiter of who is president and for that matter, whether there will be an election. "It is in the interest of the politicians to act speedily so as not to give the army an excuse to move in and seize power," a Dacca newspaper editor

said. Faction-Ridden Army

Neither of the two women was in a position to decide for herself whether to be a candidate but both were prominently mentioned for the same reason: To capitalize oo the "martyrdom" of a husband in one case and a father in the other,

"Everybody is talking about running Mrs. Zia, but nobody has asked her whether she would be willing to run," one of the slain president's supporters said. He added that it would be "unseemly" to discuss politics with her until she has completed the traditional Moslem 40-day mourning period. While Mrs. Zia's wishes are not known, it is felt that she will do as her husband's supporters wish. Miss Wazed, more formally known as Sheikh Hasina (the ritle is inherited by daughters as well as sons), appears more than willing, although her supporters say a decision will be made when the time is appropriate.

There is a question, however, as to whether Sheikh Hasina can meet the minimum age of 35, as required by Bangladesh's constitution. She was widely thought to be 33 and therefore out of the run-But at a weekend news conference. Sheikh Hasina at first said she is "about 34" and when pressed for her birthdate, said she was born Sept. 28, 1946, which would make her at 35 eligible to be a candidate next fall.

There was no ready way of checking her age since hirths are oot registered with the government in Bangladesh.

Family Murdered

Sheikh Hasina demanded an end to "politics by assassination" and said President Zia would not have died at the hands of assassins if her father's killers had not gone unpunished — and instead — "rewarded with diplomatic posts." She said that while there is noevidence that President Zia was involved in her father's death, there is also oo evidence that he was not. Gen. Zia seized power in a military coup shortly after the death of Sheikh Hasina's father, a prisoner of Pakistan when Bangladesh woo its independence from that country 10 years ago. NEW DELHI - Politics on Tuesday became another factor in the railroad disaster near Samastipur in India's northern state of Bihar where 216 bodies have been pulled from the muddy Bagmati River and estimates of the possible toll are running higher than 1,000.

Budget Cuts and Development Problems Stall Sophisticated U.S. Physics Project

By Walter Sullivan New York Times Service

NEW YORK --- Budget cuts and development difficulties have so hampered construction of a machine designed to produce the world's most powerful subatomic collisions that a high-level review panel is considering radical changes in the project.

Almost $80 million has been spent on the machine, known as Isabelle, that is being built at the Brookhaven National Laboratory near Upton, N.Y. Although the cost estimate three years ago was $275 million, the total could approach $500 million if basic changes in the machine's magnet design became necessary.

' Isabelle was designed to accelerate beams of protons, the nuclei of hydrogen atoms, in opposite directions around a ring more than two miles long. When the beams have each reached an energy of several hundred billion electroovolts, they would be directed to collide head-on.

Researchers expect such extrenely high-energy collisions to open new vistas into the nature of matter and the basic laws of physics.

tons as the particles travel around the ring at about the speed of light, 186,000 miles per second.

These obstacles have resulted in increased costs and schedule delays. In addition, if the current magnet design is used, physicists say they expect to achieve beam energies of only around 350 hillion electron-volts instead of the 400 billion electron-volts originally expected. A major expense in the opera-tion of the machine will be the power required from the Long Is-land Lighting Co. despite the ability of the superconducting magnets to achieve extremely powerful magnetic fields without excessive demand for electric energy. In use, superconducting mag-nets are chilled almost to absolute zero, or minus 460 degrees Fahrenheit (minus 273 Celsius), a state in which there is almost a total absence of heat. At that tem-

His opinion of many modern plays is that they are polemical. They make people feel guilty, and their real purpose is to get the fear and anger and rage off the play-wright's chest. The Winslow Boy is about something else. It's about enormous sacrifices being made for principle. MEXICO CITY -Ford Motor's Mexican subsidiary is negotiating a big credit from foreign sources for plant expansion, a company spokesman said Tuesday, but he refused to elaborate.

Asked to comment on press reports that Ford was completing a $250million package, the spokesman confirmed a big credit is in the offing but refused to give details. "If I were to say anything now it could disrupt the whole deal. Nothing will be known definitely for a couple of months

Kubota Sees Profit Rise This Year

Remers TOKYO — Kubota, the Japanese industrial manufacturer, said it ex-pects its profit to rise 8.8 percent to 16 billion yen ($70 million) for the business year ending April 15 next year from last year. Sales for the same year are also expected to reach 560 billion yen, up

7.3 percent from last year's level and the company hopes to maintain an unchanged 7.50 yen per share dividend for this year, it said. It said the brighter forecast is helped largely by increased industrial plant exports, a recovery in overseas sales of tractors to the United States and active pipe exports to the Middle East. A drop in domestic sales of agricultural machines due to the unusual cool summer was offset by a 17.5-percent rise in export sales to 74.60 billion yen from a year ago, it said.

The Associated Press PEKING — A Chinese joint venture with Hitachi of Japan to make television sets has opened in Fuzhou, capital of east China's Fujian province, the Chinese news agency reported Tuesday. The agency said the Fujian Hitachi Television will produce 90,000 black and white and 20,000 color sets by the end of this year and reach an annual capacity of 380,000 sets by 1983.

Chrysler, British Firm in Diesel Engine Talks

United Press International DETROIT - Chrysler may increase up its diesel product line by allowing a British firm to manufacture the fuel-thrifty engines in one of its Canadian plants.

In response to reports Monday in a trade publication, Chrysler con-firmed that negotiations are under way with Perkins Engines, a British subsidiary of Massey-Ferguson of Toronto. The trade magazine Metalworking News reported the negotiations promise to restore to Chrysler a diese engine project it was forced to drop last year as part of its massive financial cutbacks.

Deutsche BP Raises Gasoline Prices

HAMBURG - Deutsche BP said Tuesday it will raise its gasoline prices by three pfennigs to an average 1.45 Deutsche marks a litre but would not change diesel prices.

A spokesman said the price increase was the result of the company's "miscrable" earnings in its oil business, adding that it had been strongly affected by the rise of the dollar. Rise of the Dollar Could Clip U.S. Exports

By Thomas C. Hayes New York Times Service NEW YORK - U.S. exports, aided by the failing dollar in 1977 and 1978 and more aggressive sales efforts, have grown handsomely in the last three years, bolstering profits and creating new jobs. But the dollar's sharp rise this year on cur-rency markets, along with a comparatively high inflation rate in the United States, is likely to dampen, if not reverse, the mounting export prowess displayed by U.S. compa-nies in the last few years, economists say. Since the beginning of the year, the dollar has risen 22.1 percent against the Deutsche mark, 19.6 percent against the Swiss franc and 24.3 percent against the pound. "The basic goal of the Reagan administrauon is to lick inflation," said Otto Eckstein, president of Data Resources, an economic consulting concern. "A strong dollar helps, but it doesn't help the exporter. The blonm is going to be off the export market." Even though it typically takes six months or more before a hig shift in exchange rates makes its mark in exports, the U.S. trade deficit is already showing signs of widening.

In April, the trade gap jumped to a sea-sonally adjusted $3.46 billion from an unusu-ally slim $451.4 million deficit in March. in large part because of a sharp rise in petroleum imports. During the month, exports fell 7.5 percent after a strong gain in March,

'As we go aloog, the effect of the dollar's rise will become strooger and strooger," said Helen B. Junz, an international economist with Townsend-Greenspan, an economic consulting concern.

"It's hard to imagine that U.S. exports can grow as rapidly in the period ahead," said Lawrence Chimerine, president of Chase Econometrics.

We expect U.S. exporters will lose market share in the second half of this year and into 1982, particularly against the Ger-mans," Mrs. Junz said. "You will see it first in a fall-off in orders."

The U.S. industries that compete with for-eigners and are most vulnerable to a rising dollar are consumer electronics, such as televisions and calculators; texules; automohiles; and steel.

Steel imports, for example, have risen sharply in recent mooths. Moreover, four large European producers have asked the Commerce Department for permission to sell their steel below the fair price of steel imports established last year by the Com-merce Department. The rising dollar has reduced their production costs, they said, and the price they require to sell at a profit.

Although U.S. exporters in general expect rougher seas, companies selling products with superior quality, service and technology will probably be little affected by lower prio-es from foreign competitors.

These include such major exporters as In-ternational Business Machines, Boeing and the Caterpillar Tractor, Mr. Eckstein said.

At Caterpillar, which sells heavy construction equipment through distributors in more than 140 countries, management is counting on durability. low maintenance, 48-bour parts service and financing packages for buyers to overcome any problems with higher prices, a spokesman said. Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - When U.S. Trade Representative William E. Brock meets in Paris next week with the ministers of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, high on the list of items for discussion will be curbing protectionism, reducing high U.S. interest rates and the status of energy conservation.

But also on the agenda will be an issue strongly pushed by U.S. trade officials — the opening of multilateral trade negotiatious to establish agreements on trade in services. The OECD ministers will be taking the first major political step toward those negotiations by endorsing a communique stating the importance of establishing rules for trade in services. Services consist of industries such as engineering, construction, banking, accounting, shipping, insurance, movies, advertising, aviation and communications.

"In a large number of services there are no agreements at all," said Geza Fekctekuty, assistant U.S. trade representative. "Coun-tries do what they please."

Mr. Suzuki said he has no intention of discussing "various individual [trade] problems."

Each industry concerned "should conduct a continuing dialogue to avoid economic frictions thatcould lead to confrontation," he said.

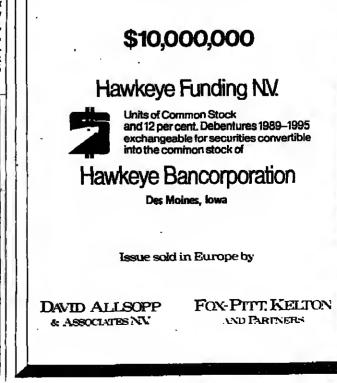

On political and monetary is-sues, Mr. Suzuki and West European leaders are expected to find more common ground — some of it against the United States. Mr. Suzuki was reported eager to seek a common Japanese-Euro-pean stand against high U.S. interest rates, which have weakened the value of both the Japanese yen and West European currencies, in preparation for talks at the economic summit meeting of seven industrial nations in Ottawa July 20 and 21. Mr. Suzuki also said that he would sound out European leaders on how "detente and peaceful co-existence" with the Soviet Union could be promoted — a theme that contrasts markedly with President Reagan's hard-line approach to Moscow.

Swiss Prices Rise 0.9%

Renters BERN - The Swiss consumer price index rose 0.9 percent in May after a fall of 0.2 percent in April, the Federal Office for Industry, Trade and Labor said Tuesday. The year-on-year rise in the index was 6 percent in May after a 5.6

The sim of those who run it is to accumulate as much inventory at the cheapest possible prices and then to mark it up as much as possible before merchandising it to the public. CAPITAL GAINS RESEARCH looks for those stocks when they're in the inventory-accumulation stage, and doesn't hesi-iste to tell its readen to sell when stocks are in the distribution, or. "blow-off," place. Thus CCR wai recommending such issues as TANDY, COMPU-TERVISION and DIGITAL EQUIPMENT in 1978, when Wall Street was still shy of these clicks because of the high-technology collapse of the early 1970s. The results in some cases serve tended profits. Technology and oil stocks led the New York market in 1980, and stock bayers are constantly on the

 because of the high-technology collapse of the early 1970a. The results in some cases seem tended profits. Technology and oil stocks led the New York market in 1980, and stock buyers are constantly on the lookout for some new group schich catch the market's fancy. CAPITAL GAINS detected the over-sold condition of milines at the turn of 1981 when all the forecasts called for declining passenger, rater and higher fuel costs. The opposite has occurred, and DELTA and TW CORP, among others are now at new highs. Similarly, CAPITAL GAINS late last year was recommending NEWMONT and PHELPS DODGE as shifting copper prices caused a general evacuation from maining issues. Clients who acted on this advice have since profited by S0 per cest or more. GGR is an independent, international research arguingstion which owns no allegistance to surpose bits its cliepts and readers. Its current strategy lays emphasis on shares of companies whose shares have been static over the past several years how whose fundamental straights are ficing resulting in a new political and investment environment. The current report of CAPITAL GAINS has some inter-exing observations about ATRIT. SPERRY CORP., GENERAL ELECTRIC and the overlooked depart ment store industry. N a "nonce" leading off this heity pile of words. George Plimpton, hose charm is indefatigable, tells us at the staff of The Paris Review is uge: "The magazine has one of the gest mastheads in literary history." ais masthead, he adds, "consists enrely of people doing something else." hich may account for the fact that e 25th-anniversary issue is two years ate. Such a quarterly journal of the ris should have, in 25 years, pub-shed at least 100 issues. Plimpton nects our attention to the cover: his is No. 79. Never mind; it is fine.

An anniversary asks us to consider te aspirations and the accomplishents of the enterprise. It wants to now how it's not doing. One should e profound. Magazines as highbrow ; Scrutiny and Horizon in Britain, id as middlebrow as Collier's, Life nd The Saturday Evening Post in the nited States, had their seasons and en went away. When and if they ame back, they were not the same agazines. How to account for the amina of The Paris Review, if we scount Plimpton's charm and the ankroll of Sadruddin Aga Khan. How is it that The Paris Review nlike, say, Partisan Review, which as been around considerably longer seems so tangential to the politics its portion of the 20th century, alwing, of course, for those dislocaons of the literary sensibility that low up in short stories and poems e or 10 years after the historic conision? Why does The Paris Review, ways civilized and rather tame, surve while such little magazines as ed China and the Single Girl, bararous and hortatory, die in a garage ke so many clenched fists severed om the brain? Is there anything ong with licking modernism as if it ere an ice-cream cone?

I propose to answer none of these estions. The Paris Review set out, f-consciously, to be different from rtisan Review: no literary theory, overt politics, just the news from e fault line as continents of culture ib and supture in their drift. Its ccuse is quality. To be sure, with the ception of Amiri Baraka ---- who patributes his best poem in some ears — the poets in this special issue re establishmentarian. We are not reley, Donald Davie, James Dicy, Thom Gunn, John Hollander, ichard Howard, X.J. Kennedy, Galay Kinnell, Kenneth Koch, Maxine umin, Denise Levertov, John Logan, loward Moss, James Schuyler, Fredick Seidel, Anne Sexton, Louis impson, William Stafford and May venson, just to be alphabetical out it. We should, however, be pleased. Maxine Knmin's poem is wonderful. And in between the poems grow prose prickles, cantankerous cacti. Hemingway puts in an appearance, with a previously unpublished introduction to a book of his stories that never came out; he embarrasses himself. One of Hemingway's ex-wives, the su-perb journalist Martha Gellhorn, does 13 a surgical job on Stephen Spender and Lillian Hellman as wayward memoir-15 pensate, William H. Gass has a new story that might have been written by his favorite, Paul Valery. Terry Southern is represented as, perhaps, the best of Playboy. Raymond Carver continues to confound in the best way - his echoes leave footprints on the mind. And Jerry Bumpus does a number on Richard M. Nixon, in San Clemente exile, that is brilliant; we will never rid our dreams of this man.

Best of all is the interview with Rebecca West, who is cherished by some of us. She is 88, and unrepentant. She admires Mark Twain, quite properly. She feels that there are no advantages at all in being a woman and a writer: "None, whatsoever." She prefers not to talk about her sad affair with H.G. Wells, although she is surprised to hear that her son, the issue of that affair, is writing a book on Joan of Arc. She refuses to admire the Virgin Mary. doesn't think much of Colette as a person, questions the sexual provess of Turgenev, describes Som-erset Mangham as "so nearly made, like a sword stick that fits just so." and calumnies the editors of The New Yorker. Her interviewer says, "They have a tremendous reputation." Rebecca West replies: "I don't know

The interviewer deserves a mention. The Paris Review interviews succeed because of the interviewer. Throughout the conversation with West, I wondered at the intelligence and co-centricity of ber questioner. The per-son who asked the questions was Marina Warner. That is class. Class is, what makes a magazine survive. After the original impulse, the sneeze of the zeitgeist, has expired

I wish The Paris Review had more engaged the politics of its time — per-haps even been rude — but I wish I had, too It justifies itself by having a Marina Warner talk to a Rebecca West, Happy birthday, before it's too late.

I have known for several years that it is unwise to disagree with Hellman; I am persuaded now that it would be almost suicidal to disagree with Gellhorn. By way of rebuttal, Speader waves his arms in the air and swats a moth.

IF one could arrange a tournament for teams from commuter railroads throughout North America, the New Haven representatives would probably be strong favorites. The standard is very high, as witness the diagramed deal, despite the high speed of play and the confusion gen-erated by "ghoulie" dealing, in which the cards are distributed in bunches without shuffling. North opened a shaky hand, and East crowded the auctions with three spades. He pushed his opponents into a five-diamond contract with three top losers. West could not find a spade to lead, which gave South hope. He now knew that East held all seven missing spades, and probably did not have the club ace. After winning with the heart queen in dumm trump to his hand and play deuce. As he expected, W

By Alan Truscott the ace, and the club king was now established, offering a discard for one of the spade losers. West returned the club queen, and South could have made his contract easily if he had won with the king in dummy. But this would have been risky play: East might have been able to ruff, and there would have been no way out.

The declarer found a way to bring home 11 tricks against any distribu-tion. He ducked in dummy and ruffed in his hand. Then he entered dummy with a trump, hoping to be able to claim the contract. All would have been well if West had held one or both of the remaining trumps. Unfor-tunately. West discarded a heart A club ruff left this ending:

A Sea Change for Clemence?

The Soccer Scene

ational Herold Tribune Interne

LONDON - The old man had comforted his young lodger in the years when the boy's ambition had been stifled. There had been long, long hours when he had arrived "home" convinced his time would never come, convinced he would drift through manhood as perpetual understudy to the No. 1 goalie.

And the old man, a Finn who was a ship's inter-preter and had disembarked for life at Liverpool's docks, spun many a seafarer's tale to water down his lodger's dismay. But the landlord's own time was running short: He was 77 when, 10 years ago, the youngster graduated to cup final with Liverpool.

With a fatherly pride, the Finn sat chewing on his pipe, hanging on every word of a long, probing interview. At last, taking exception to a question about whether young Ray Clemence could keep his feet oo the ground now that success was coming, he interrupted:

'Swell-headed? Ray? Let me tell you something.

"Ray has been with us since he came to Liverpool four years ago. He hasn't changed a bit. The only thing that's grown around his head is his damned hair. And you know, he will be just the same when he brings his medals and international caps home." The old man, and his words and pride in the young Clemence, are still writ large in memory. They come to mind oow especially as Clemence - richer by hun-dreds of thousands of pounds, by five league chamucts of holdands of points, by he reaging cham-pionship medals, three European Cup medals, two UEFA Cup medals, a European Super Cup medal and English FA and league cup medals — believes his time is finished at Liverpool.

Recent Form: Unchanged

Last month he became the first goalie in 33 years to captain his country, for which he has played 56 times. Two weeks ago he was the most joyous of all the Liverpool team that again won Europe's major club trophy. And last weekend he was No. 1 as England rescued her World Cup hopes from the ashes with a 3victory over Hungary in Budapest.

Yet back at Livepool there have been two, perhaps three, budding goalkeekpers who never got the chance to flower as he had. Clemence's consistently elastic art and resilient athleocism have meant he has missed no more than half a dozen appearances in more than 700. And when, in 1979, he signed a new 4-year con-tract, he estimated he would play out his days at the club that had plucked him from Scunthorpe for £12,000 in 1967.

How long could it go on? Clemence will he 33 in August — oot ancient by goalkeeping standards, but cracking on. He faces, if he is to continue his love affair with Liverpool's vocal supporters, renewed challenges.

Last March Liverpool paid the North American Soccer League Vancouver Whitecaps £250,000 for a spectacular Rhodesian-born goalkeeper, Bruce Grobelaar. He is not built from the same padent mold as Clemence: No way will Grobbelaar wait in the reserves for three years while age overtakes the No. 1.

Grobbelaar had the audacity to turn down Liver-pool a year ago, and the very fact that Liverpool has followed up indicates that the odd moments of frailty Clemence showed last season (admittedly behind a ibstantially weakened defense) suggests that, at best, be will have to hattle for supremacy. That means the dreaded "triangle." Clemence has said of that excruciating Liverpool triangle five to six times, saving 15 to 18 shots....lt's on a par with a sprinter running 100 yards in 10 seconds. It's easy to tell when a man has had enough, because he can't get up."

Clemence, when he saw his club manager Mooday explained that after 14 years he wants a new chal-lenge. Liverpool is in no hurry to show him the door - yet it has Grobbelaar, who is doubtless prepared to burst a gut in the triangle.

So Clemence, despite an interest in an express delivery firm in Liverpool, is ready to move his wife and two young daughters to London - so says the grape vine. Tottenham Hotspur, having won the English Cup and won a battle of wills and accountants to resign its two Argentine internationals, Ricky Villa and Osvaldo Ardiles, has (significantly, since March) is rumored to be courting Clemence.

The Good Eye

But we have digressed from the Finn and his recollections. Thorough in that, as in everything, Liverpool knew what it was doing when it lodged a raw young goalkeeper in that old man's household. Clemence, then, had all the natural talent in the world and all the humility of a lad who, at 16, was hired to clear deck chairs off Skegness Beach and who as a failsafe studied accountancy at night.

He had no money than and, as his landlord pointed ont, oo symptoms of a swollen head. The old sailor read the signs well. Clemence, without doubt a master of his trade and among the world's most able goalkeepers, may be after a new challenge, even after a last big slice of transfer money. But England need cover doubt that he wants to go on wearing interna-tional caps or fear that his head will become to big to wear them. A pity that soccer does not share his stability. The England camp has recently been full of individuals whose loyalty leaves much to be desired. It is a reflection of the greed, the impatience, the insecurity that festers at the top of the game.

Prime Example

Example: Manchester United, besmirching a worldly reputation, recently hrutally sacked Manager Dave Sextoo after a gallop at season's end - seven straight victories. The club's young chairman, Martin Edwards, inheriting the seat when his father died, panicked. He fired Sexton in a particularly shoddy manner and thought the club's wealth and glitter would draw the big names like moths to the flame. The moths shied away. Lawrie MeMenemy, Bobby Robson and Ron Saunders publicly rejected overtures. Other top managers earned a few hundred pounds each hy "writing" newspaper exclusives on why they wouldn't go to Manchester.

The embarrassment finally ended Tuesday when Ron Atkinson - at best the fourth choice, so far as we know - signed a three-year contract to manage England's most popular club.

Even that was unsavory, Atkinson's previous club, West Bromwich Albion, demanded compensation and threatened legal action. The gentleman's agreement within soccer was in shreds, and all because Manchester United, not satisfied with a winner and an honest manager, also wanted a colorful "media" manager. It got one.

It is now 20 years since the ex-

Spinks, Guard and Attitude Up, Set for Holmes

By Michael Karz New York Times Service

NEW YORK - The old brown Labrador retriever was lying peacefully on the grass at Leon Spinks' hideaway training camp — very peacefully, considering that her master was pulling porcupine quills from her face with a pair of pliers.

It wasn't the first time she had bitten into a porcupine, a concerned Spinks said.

"That's why they call them dogs," observed the last universally recognized world heavyweight champion. "Me, something hurts me the first time. I don't go back

For a while, it appeared he wouldn't beback. The first time around as champion was a painful experience. The man with the gap-toothed grin and the driving violations had become a nationwide running joke. He blew the title and he blew his first comeback, and the jokes continued.

But people didn't know he was crying himself to sleep. Spinks is back, in prime time on national television, just as, in 1978, when he won the title from Muhammad Ali and then lost it back to him. Friday night, in only his 15th professional fight (his record is a modest 10-2-2), he goes for sport's most prestigious individual title for the second time.

Go Abead - Langh

All he has to do is beat undefeated Larry Holmes in Detroit, his new hometown. Laugh all you want. Spinks still sucks his thumb. Laugh all you want.

Spinks is getting a divorce; the joke is that his wife, Nova, gets custody of his front teeth. Laugh all you want.

Holmes is not laughing. "The better the fighter, the better I fight," he said. "And I know Leon's going to bring out the best in

There are few experts --- from Bob Arum, who promoted Spinks' first nine pro fights ("now wouldn't touch him with a pole unless. I want a divorce"), to An-gelo Dundee, Ah's old trainer, to Madison Square Garden matchmaker Gil Claucy who don't give Spinks at least a fair chance at upsetting Holmes and winning the World Boxing Council title that was taken from him when he gave Ali an immediate rematch.

In Spinks. Holmes will finally be meeting an opponent with faster hand speed. "Leon's hands are so fast he'll be able to pick off Larry's jabs," said Dale Mitchell, one of Spinks' trainers.

Pressere

Pressure is Spinks' forte and pressure is what Holmes dislikes most. But to pres-sure Holmes, Spinks must be in top condition. "Leon can fight as good as anybody in the world," said Sam Solomon, Spinks' trainer when he first turned professional. "He can run Larry out of the ring --- unless what I hear about him is true."

Solomon heard Leon was not in shape. He could believe the rumors. He remem-bered the weeks in the Catskill snow getting ready for the first Ali fight. "He'd go to bed at night and turn on his music box real loud and lock his door," said Solomon, "and then jump out the second-story window. The only way I could find him was to trace his tracks in the snow."

Solomon instructed the local bartenders to call him as soon as Spinks showed up. Still, said Michael, Spinks' younger brother and the leading light-heavyweight contender: "There'd be mornings when we'd get op to run and Lee would just be coming hack through the snow." "That was nothing," said Solomon.

After he won the title, he'd change cities on me. He'd be training in Hilton Head, S.C., a couple of days and we'd be hearing the cops got him in Elyria, Ohio, or SL.

But this time, less than two weeks before Friday's bout, Spinks was down to a muscular 195 pounds, about 5 under his current fighting weight, and was told by his trainers to case up. Spinks has finally realized he was on "the edge of disaster," that he could no longer abuse his body and expect it to endure the hardships of battle. An Olympic gold medalist in 1976. Spinks will be 28 next month. In many ways, he has grown up.

Leon Spinks

He had too many close calls getting back to where he is now. In his first fight after losing the title back to Ali, he was knocked out in Round I by Gerrie Coctzee. "That was the lowest Lee could get," said Michael Spinks. "He knew better than anybody what happened. He wasn't ready, and I don't mean just physically. Everybody told him this guy was nothing, that he could take him out whenever he wanted."

The oext comeback almost ended in the second round, when Spinks was rocked by Alfredo Evangelista. He somehow held on and knocked Evangelista out three rounds later. Next he drew with Eddie (Animal) Lopez, needing a point taken from his opponent for butting. But subsequently he stopped Kevin Isaac, a journeyman, and last Oct. 2, he knocked out Bernardo Mercado, the topranked WBC contender. He knocked out the hard-hitting Mercado despite taking two wicked rights in the opening round two wicked rights in the opening round and despite a training regime that includ-ed late-evening disco dancing a couple of nights before the fight. "I think he finally realized how close to disaster he was," said Jerry Sawyer, Spinks' fourth manager. "If be had lost to Evangelista, that would have been the end." end.'

So this time Spinks has stayed faithfully so this time spinks has surver faitheauty in his northern Michigan training camp, between the villages of Harrietta and Boon, about 17 miles west of Cadillac and far away from trouble.

"I just wish this thing had come off May 22 when it was supposed to originally," said Sawyer as he drove through the woods to the camp. "We had Leon up here five straight weeks and he was an ammal, ready to kill. I gave Leon a week or two off, but be's been up here ever since and he's never been off the premises."

The Edelweiss Lodge was deserted except for the Spinks camp, which took up two suites and a cabin. There were the three trainers - Del Williams, the 67year-old head man who grew up in De-troit as a teammate of Eddie Futch, now Holmes' trainer, on the same Brewster team that Joc Louis made famous; Dale Williams (no relation) and Robert Mitchell — and several fighters. "The thing about the camp," said Sawyer, "is that Leon was surrounded by good people, clean people who couldn't lead him astray.

Špinks has been difficult at times. He would break the boredom with temper tantrums for which he'd later apologize. There was little to do but train.

And be'd stay up late. Spinks has an ... 'It's just so hard for me to trust.' unusual body clock. He would run at 10 p.m. and it was not unusual to find him in the empty bar at midnight, staring blankly at television. There was less of a feeling of confinement in the har. "I hate being elosed in," he said, explaining in part his past lapses.

There are other factors. Friends and associates worry about a self-destructiveness in Spinks, the overuse of liquor and drugs.

'Strange Tastes'

"He's got some strange tastes in women and bars," said one friend. "Usually they're both the lowest class." "He never wanted to be around the more sophisticated people," said Butch Lewis, the promoter who had originally signed him for Arum's Top Rank compaoy. "He wanted people with the same ghetto background. He has a complex."

"Leon don't like guys with oes who speak proper English," said Mitchell, Spinks' No. 2 trainer.

Spinks is still suspicious of people, even Sawyer, the man who has set him up financially. Spinks is getting about $500,000 for Friday's fight, and if he beats Holmes it would take only one multimillion-dollar title fight against a Gerry Cooney to leave him in the position where he would never have to work again.

"I'm not skepocal of Jerry to the point where I'd let someone take his place," ' said Spinks. "Jerry has helped me a lot. It's just so hard for me to trust someone."

There is no mystery to Spinks' evident lack of self-confidence. He was a child of one of the worst ghettos in St. Louis and a sickly kid at that - low blood pressure, asthma.

Leon was beaten by a father who often Leon was beaten by a fatter who often told him, "You'll never be anything but a bum." His mother, he said, "told me I was going to be like my father." The other kids called the oldest of the Spinks boys "Goofy Leon." Then they would beat him up.

Making a Name Stand Up

"My uncles were always shooting up someone or getting shot, and all I ever heard as a kid was what a crazy family the Spinks were," said Leon. "What I wanted was to make the Spinks name stand up

He freely admits he was not prepared for the top. "It would have been helpful if someone had sat me down before and explained it to me," be said.

"After I won the title. I thought all I got to do is defend it. I didn't know they were going to demand so much of my time. This time, they're not going to see so much of Leon."

"I want to be free - I'm a buman being, and a human being is going to make mistakes. I was just trying to live and let live. But I can't do anything without a writeup about 'Leon this' or 'Leon that.' The name they plastered, the name they stamped on me, I don't think it's

Quit Growing Old!

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK --- It becomes increasingly obvious that very few Americans can afford to grow old any more. What with inflation eroding your nest egg, the impend-ing crackdown on Social Security and so on, old age has become a luxury for the few.

A lot of people who are busy growing old right now are just going to have to stop it. I lunched the other day with a fellow who spent the hour grousing about how retirement was going to drive him into poverty. It was hard to sympathize with him.

"You wouldn't have to retire if you hadn't gone ahead and gotten old." I was tempted to tell him, but didn't. At the time he was dashing around getting old, it was consid-ered the sociable thing to do. Everybody did it, not just the swells.

I had parents and uncles and aunts, people who were not at all in the Rockefeller class, and they got old. Sure it was foolish. We all know that now. but it was considered the thing to do then, like hopping into your 300-horsepower automobile and burning 25 gallons of gas because it was Sunday afterncon

The gasoline companies did not tell anybody. "Hey, go easy on that gasoline because the stuff is running out." Later they said that was all that was on their minds, but what they were saving then was. "Put a tiger in your tank and burn up the old highways." Same with getting old.

Golden years. Senior citizen. Bask in the hazy glow of Retire-ment Village under the palm-shaded desert seashore.

No wonder people could hardly wait to get old. They had all experienced youth in the Depression and seen those annual news photos of John D. Rockefeller, looking as ancient as Ramses, dispensing the annual birthday dimes under the palm trees.

I even anticipated growing old myself at one time, in silvery dig-nity, with voice creaking like Lionel Barrymore's, I would pass advice to foolish youngsters and tipping flunkeys with dimes on my birthdays.

* * * In fact, I flung myself rather vigorously into the pursuit of the vice and even tried to speed up the process. I well remember - what fools we were in those days! - monkeying with a draft card to be-come 21 when I was only 19. (Beer was illegal under 21 at that time.)

It took the Arabs to wean us from the gasoline; the government has done the joh for oldness. Fi-nally, it confesses that it was fooling us all those years. Ain't gonna be no dimes to give the flunkeys on birthdays under the palm trees. Ain't gonna be no palm trees cither, old-timer, unless you spent the useful years studying tax avoidance and got dimes tucked away in a Swiss hank.

When the retirement people started saying that growing old was strictly for the big-money set, I stopped getting old. 1 went off it three weeks ago, and the results have been remarkable. After three weeks of giving up aging, 1 look only two weeks and six days older. At this pace, I can age 17 days per year slower than in the old days. If 1 had started 21 years ago, I would already be a full year younger than I am at present

Eventually. Congress will probably quit dilly-dallying with the prohlem of growing older and enact laws to end it once and for all. There is already a hill in the works, sponsored by Sen. Jesse Helms and Rep. Henry Hyde, to make life begin, by act of Congress, at the moment of conception.

This bill has something to do with outlawing abortion, but the principle has far-reaching applica-tions. A Congress with the power to enact biology should have no trouble keeping us all from grow-ing old. An act of Congress declaring that human aging ceases after the age of 40 would do the trick. A bit far-fetched, you say? That's what you said when they told you that you'd soon he paying $1.50 for gas and $8,000 for a car no bigger than your grandmother's hread box. And look at you now. Foolishly growing old. How much nicer to be able to say, "Would you believe it? Forty years old by act of Congress, and don't feel a day over 75."

'Barnum' and Coleman

Producing a Hit Play Involves More Rings Than a Circus

1.57

By Michael Zwerin national Herald Tribune

ONDON - The fact that "Barnum" turned out to be a big hit left Cy Coleman with mixed emotions.

True, it was the first Broadway play he had produced and it was gratifying and profitable, and he gets invited to fancy dinners and parties in Paris and London while consulting on the European productions (spending several weeks on the Riviera in between). But there are also road companies in New Orleans and Washington to control, he is negotiating Australian, Mexican, Italian and West German rights, the Broadway production looks like it's going to run for years and there are cast albums to produce, vacation replacements to hire, publishing and other subsidiary rights to handle. There has not been too much time left to play the piano recently. He knew from all the hits he'd been involved with as a composer that a musical comedy is a living breathing thing and that the producer is like a doctor, always on call: if the trombone player has a stomach ache tonight, he's going to hear about it. "A Broadway producer is a garbage dump," he says. Still, it was a new challenge and he was selling foreign rights, it wasn't as though he had to sit in every single box office with a satchel counting the cash. But he seems to he making a lot of house calls in any case, and "Bar-num" is a complicated case.

Heavily Insured

The London production, which opens Thursday at the Pal-ladium, involved a £5-million insurance policy to cover the dareand Carnegie Hall between the devil circus feats the cast perages of 6 and 9. He went to New forms. More than a thousand performers were auditioned to York's prestigious High School of Music and Art and after gradfind 12 who could juggle, tumble, walk a wire, and sing and dance uation began to build a profitable career playing cocktail jazz as well. Three million alone is on piano in smart Manhattan rooms. "If you trip on an East the star. Michael Crawford, who walks the wire, bounces off tram-polines and works on a trapeze. Side street you're liable to fall into a club I've played," he said. So this musical about The Greatest Show on Earth is covered by man played easy music and peo-ple liked it and the money the biggest insurance policy in the history of British theater. A first order of 50,000 balloons to be given away to children has been delivered to the Palladium tail style was not much appreciated by the hard-core jazz fraternity, but it did not seem to already, more will follow. Pre-bother him. He began to be a personage in the New York soci-ety world. He wrote a series of hit songs, including "Witchcraft," "Pass Me By" and "The Best Is Yet To Come." He wrote the music for hit Broadway plays, including "Sweet Charity," "See-Saw," "Wildcat" and "Little Me." He played a concert version of his material with the Pittsburgh Symphony and other orchestras. "My friend Bob Goldstein, a" bassoonist from Music and Art, got into the booking business and he talked me into doing concert versions of my material. I wove it together, you know, with a hig cadenza at the end. All 1 did was take some of my old recording arrangements and xerox. the violin parts. But it became boring at the end of three years, and it was too much work to write new arrangements."

Cy Coleman: "A Broadway producer is a garbage dump."

He produced several Shirley MacLaine TV specials, including "If They Could See Me Now," for which he won two Emmy awards. He was nominated for 15 Grammys, seven Tonys and one Oscar. He scored the films "Father Goose" (starting Cary Grant), "The Art of Loving" and "Heartbreak Kid."

But scoring films "isn't much fun. By the time you start to work, everybody else has gone home. It's just you and the cutter in the screening room. Writing is a kinety enough profession with-out having to do film scores. The only good thing about it is you might make a lot of money from ASCAP and from there on in all you do is go to parties. But I do that anyway."

Coleman paused for a big, easy, partygoer smile: "Writing shows is much more interesting, you're in on it from the concept.

Protecting the Work

He reluctantly began to realize that conception and writing were not enough. A musical play is not like producing a record, which he had done many times, where once it is finished it stays fixed on wax. Musicals are growing things, subject to human error. He decided to produce, he said. "to protect my work. There are fewer and fewer professional Broadway producers now, and amateurs tend to screw things up. A lot of rich people are buying into the glamour of Broadway by producing shows. If I've put my creative effort into a project for a year or two, I don't want it to be in the hands of some dilettante. There are so many aspects; he can fire people or hire them without my approval, he can be spite-ful, or close the show early for his own selfish tax purposes. He can stay home and expect a show to run by itself. Theater is hard, not easy, and it requires professionals.

Now he owns miny theatrical properties, "I Love My Wife", for example. He comes into a town, gets on the horn to local impresarios and hawks his wares like a traveling salesman: "I seem to have become a professional producer. I have also been a mu-sic publisher for 15 years. I have lots of people working for me now. You get into these things and they grow and you need more and more help and you just hope that you have the right management. I guess after all it's not really so different from playing the piano. You just have to learn to control people instead of keys." side there was the Welsh Guard or-

Lady Di didn't make it (Queen Elizabeth reportedly did not ap-prove) but Prince Charles did. In what may well be his last public appearance abroad before he gets married next month, the prince presided at a charity ball at the British Embassy in Paris Monday night given by the British ambassador, Sir Reginald Hibbert, for United World Colleges, founded in 1962 by Lord Mountbatten to bring together young people from different racial, political and philosophical backgrounds. Prince Charles became president of the organization in 1978, when Lord Mountbatten became its honorary president. There are now colleges president. Inere are now concess in Wales, Singapore and Vàn-couver. A fourth agricultural one, catering to the Third World's needs, is being planned in Vene-zuela. The 800 francs-a-couple, block for official for the bacoubt in black-fie affair (which brought in 350,000 francs for the charity) in-cluded a lot of top-drawer French and a fair sprinkling of British guests. The list included the usual guests, the list included the usual rich and beautiful, a political cross-section of Mitternands (the president's brother, Robert with his wife, son and daughter) and Giscard d'Estaings (Olivier, brother of the former French presi-dent and himself head of the French committee), and Prince Al-bert of Monaco, freshly graduated from Amherst, and his younger sister, Princess Stephanie, who wore white for her Paris debut. They were chaperoned by their mother, Princess Grace, in pale blue, matching her eyes. For Prince Charles, the evening started with a 22-person dinner party at the em-bassy which included the Aga Khan (he is one of the major benefactors, along with Fiat's Giovanni Agnelli and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat) and Olivier Giscard d'Estaing. The very British menn included salmon and lamb and a tiered cake in the shape of three ostrich feathers — a reminder of Prince Charles' royal crest. On one stop, including with Regine, but never twice with the same woman During the evening, he confided that his biggest regret is that Lord Mountbatten had not lived to meet Lady Diana, "because he would have loved her righteousoes." * * *
